With offices in Washington DC (USA) and Geneva (Switzerland), it seeks to ensure the development, evolution and use of the Internet for the benefit of people throughout the world.

The Internet Society addresses issues that confront the future of the Internet and is the home for the groups responsible for Internet Infrastructure Standards, including the Internet Engineering Task Force (IETF) and the Internet Architecture Board (IAB).

The Internet Society does not only act as a global clearing house for information on the Internet and education, but also as a facilitator and coordinator of Internet-related initiatives around the world. For over fifteen years, ISOC has been developing international training programs for developing countries, which have played a vital role in the growth of Internet access, both in terms of quantity and quality.

Regional Offices and Chapters

ISOC gathers more than 100 member organizations and 28,000 individual members over 80 Chapters throughout the world. To better serve the regional Internet community, ISOC has created bureaus in the following regions:

North America
Africa
Asia
Europe
Latin America and the Caribbean

Through sponsored events, training workshops, tutorials, public and regional policies, and local Chapters, the Internet Society serves the needs of a growing global Internet community. From business to social issues, our aim is to improve the availability and usability of the Internet on the largest possible scale.

The Internet Society Chapters are groups voluntarily organized by ISOC members. They seek to gather people residing in a specific geographic region, like a city or a country, or even a larger area, or sharing a specific interest in the Internet.

The role of Chapters is strategic to ISOC's mission ISOC, both locally and regionally. The Chapters seek to provide ISOC with local and regional perspectives on Internet evolution and the issues that affect it.
